

CEDIA-ICA Conference 2017

4/5 May 2017, Vienna, Austria

Defining Agronomists Professional Profiles and Agricultural and Life Science Study Programmes

Agronomists

This term covers professional profiles such as agricultural scientist, agricultural engineer, agricultural economist, food scientist, food engineer and others based on academic education with university degrees relating to the European Qualifications Framework (EQF) in the above fields.

Focus

We will discuss how current agronomists professional profiles and agricultural and life science study programmes relate. How professional associations, alumni organizations and life science universities can support each other, so that they can deliver the professionals and leaders in the transformation of the bio-economy - agriculture, and the food and non-food sectors - according to sustainable development principals.

Expected Outcomes

1. Examples of agronomists professional profiles and the agricultural and life science study programmes, discussed on the basis of the "Agronomist Universal Charter 2015"
2. Agenda for cooperation between life science universities, alumni organizations and professional associations to strengthen the education and training of agronomists
3. Proposals for the next steps.

Sessions

1. Agronomists for the bio-economy - agriculture, and the food and non food sectors - and the rural and urban development of the 21st century: challenging today's professional profiles on the basis of the "Agronomist Universal Charter 2015".
2. Preparing agronomists for a more sustainable world food system at the local and global level: a critical view on study programmes in order to gain the qualifications needed.
3. Actions for cooperation between life science universities, alumni organizations and professional associations to address common challenges.
